ADMIRAL WINSLOW TO ASK RETIREMENT

Friends Say He Is Disappointed at Not Being Elevated to Atlantic Fleet Command.

Rear Admiral Cameron McR. Wincommanding a special service squadron in Mexican waters, is about to be retired from active service, acording to information received today. Admiral Winslow was confidently exsected to be made commander-in-chief of the Atlantic fleet before the rise to prominence of Rear Admiral Frank F Fletcher, and, it is said here, he is angered at being superseded, and al-ready has made application to the Navy Department for retirement.

According to law, Admiral Winslow is entitled to retirement, having completed more than forty years of service, and it is believed there is no doubt near and far today upon the twenty-

It is no secret that Admiral Winslow has been looking forward for several years to the appointment as commander to the Atlantic fleet, the place to which all naval officers aspire, but the recent announcement of Secretary of the Navy Daniels that Admiral Fletcher would succeed Admiral Badger, as commander-in-chief, put an end to say further hope in that direction, and the unofficial announcement of friends here that Admiral Winslow would ask for retirement followed.

Beginning early last winter, he devoted practically all his attention to the political situation in his State, and gave little attention to Sen-

The whole Senate has its eye on the outcome of the fight in Pennsylvania, for a variety of reasons. And a good deal of information about conditions there has filtered in to Senators. At one time, there was much talk that Penrose would not be returned to the Senate, but the present indications are that he is going to win out. For this,

Perfects Organization. One reason is that Penrose has per fected what is said to be an unusually trong organization. Another is that Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer, the Democratic candidate for Senator, is not likely to prove exceptionally strong at the polls. He has factional opposition in his own party and does not have the confidence of the great bulk of progressive minded voters of the State. As for Gifford Pinehot, candidate of the Bull Moose party, there is no doubt Mr. Pinehot is making an unusual campaign and is arousing enthusiasm where he speaks, but the developments thus far do not indicate he can command such support at the polls as will elect him or will block the election of Penrose. Democratic candidate for Senator, is

One of the factors in favor of Pen-rose is that Pennsylvania is normally a strong Republican and a protection State, and there is pronounced dissat-isfaction with the tariff law. More-over, Penrose and his lieutenants are making the tariff a prominent issue in the campaign.

The fact that Colonel Roosevelt, according to present advices, will not be enabled to make a speaking campaign in Pennsylvania, or at most anything hike the extensive campaign planned at one time, is expected to work in favor of Penrose and to tend to hold down the vote for Pinchot. If Roose-velt were able to devote weeks of campaigning to Pennsylvania, the situation would be much worse for Penrose. As it is, he and the men close in his confidence, are talking optimistically of the fidence, are talking optimistically of the outcome in November.

Progressive Republicans in Congress are far from pleased over the strength shown by Penrose. They like it as little as they like the prospect that Foraker may come back in Ohio. They fear the effect, in 1918, of the presence of old-time reactionaries in high places in the party. Their comment on it is that the pendulum is swinging in the Republican direction again and that some of the old leaders are bound to hold on. But they insist that the grip these men once had on the Republican organization, in a national way, has been broken.
